Curator's Essay

GREAT HALL

If You Stay Busy You Have No Time To Be Unhappy

18 February—28 May 2017

In MOCA's Great Hall, the works of eighty-eight artists upend conventional distinctions concerning mediums, materials, size, and creative backgrounds. Selections encompass representational and abstract painting, photographs, drawings, text pieces, sculptures, ceramics, furniture, and unclassifiable objects. Coinciding with MOCA Tucson's twentieth anniversary and staged at a historic moment of uncertainty and upheaval, this exhibition is an expansion of the museum's typical mandate into a pluralistic exploration of styles and impulses.

Philip Guston's quote from 1967 is applicable: "I got sick and tired of all that Purity! Wanted to tell stories." Echoing Guston, MOCA's Chief Curator was motivated to rebel against a perceived airlessness and inwardness of the status quo. The phrase If You Stay Busy You Have No Time To Be Unhappy, seen on a historical placard for St. Joseph's orphanage in South Tucson (now demolished, to make way for the 19 freeway), became a serious summons. It sparked a desire for relevance that questions institutional assumptions of what is appropriate and important.

Summarizing three years at the museum and assessing the variety of art seen in that period with a critical and discriminating stance, this is a turn away from the often out-of-touch hermeticism of the art "world." Purposely, this carries the endeavor into less resolved territory, making the outcome wilder and woollier than usual, kind of funky, catholic in taste, and a bit punk, counterbalanced by exacting discipline applied to necessary hard choices. Selected with extreme prejudice and an emphasis on connoisseurship, it is on one level a backlash against the backlash against heterogeneity, and on the other a biased compilation that strives to bring people in the door, shake things up, provoke reactions, and stimulate discussion.

This is not a procedural survey but an intuitive bringing in and reaching out, in conjunction with a civic situation that has bred uneasiness. It must be clearly stated that there is an inherent subjectivity at work, a reflection of personal likes and predilections, a discerning point-of-view in service of stirring things up. Multi-textured, both formally and culturally, it is an earnest stab at topicality outside of the precincts of Tucson, MOCA, and the typical museum model—a curatorial assemblage celebrating a vibrant past, present, and hopefully, future.

Pitching such a big tent, the question of criteria becomes paramount. Broadly, the work has aesthetic merit as understood and defined by the curator. The artists represented are currently active, and have a connection to MOCA Tucson. Also included are past exhibitors and individuals from distant locales who have participated in the museum's residency program. A project of this scale implies inclusion, and certainly we find it here, with globally recognized and less well-known practitioners representing a diversity of ages and levels of accomplishment.

So with all these voices in the room, what is it? It is weird and copious, strange and unexpected. We find dualities and contrasts; connections are made across those dialectics; affinities are found; differences are highlighted while making the case that it's all connected. It includes the ominous and forbidding, as well as the uncanny—the creative act frequently can't ignore rampant ugliness and strife. The abject cohabitates with the monochromatic; abstraction and figuration fight it out and find convergence; formalism rubs up against its opposite; the grotesque and the psychologically charged veer to humor and the explicitly erotic. There is a section alluding to the surrounding Sonoran wilderness; a politically charged interlude; a precisionist passage disrupted by sauciness and surrealism; as well as objects that defy boundaries. There is feeling and meaning and non-meaning and meanings so different and multiple they're overwhelming.

Taking risks is imperative, since without doing so there is no gain, and this is not the moment to play it safe. Reflecting the edginess everyone feels in this epoch of fiery rhetoric, crassness, and alarm, forcing exposure to diversification is a political act. The title clicks because it gets at why everyone makes art: “staying busy” is a possible prescription for staying sane. This is art that asks questions. It is not predetermined. For people who are open to new experiences, idealistic notions of what art can be are brought together to enlighten and benefit participants and audience alike. With authorial enunciation, it flows, rhymes, and coalesces into an exciting and invigorating assembly, which also gives every artist the opportunity to shine on their own.
